

Resistant capture is a coupled dynamic–phenotypic–therapeutic process: ecological state determines treatment history, treatment history changes exposure, and phenotypic transition parameters determine whether tolerance remains reversible or becomes a route to resistance.